Those who have family service radios, please bring them. People from the Fall River area (including co-leader Ken Able) will meet at 9:00 a.m. at the Fall River Vista. Rarities are possible!

CHRISTMAS BIRD COUNTS

These annual events are held dawn to dusk and rain or shine. Novice birders will be teamed up with experienced birders as sighting recorders – it’s a great way to learn the local birds and make a useful contribution. Or, come to a compilation and find out what’s been seen near your own back yard.

ACTIVITY REPORTS

Second Saturday Trip Report - The 9/13/08 trip to Shasta College netted 43 species for the three birders who showed up. The best birds were Say’s Phoebe, Lincoln Sparrow, Lewis’s Woodpecker, American Kestrel and a lingering Western Kingbird.

Community Expo 2008 – The Wintu Audubon booth at Mt. Shasta Mall on 9/13 and 9/14 got our message out, earned us some money, and won us the first prize for booth decorations! The prize was a $100 certificate good at all participating stores in the mall. We will be raffling off the certificate at the November and December general meetings, with the drawing to be held at the end of the December meeting – be sure and buy tickets – it could be a “leg up” on your Christmas shopping!

COMINGS & GOINGS

Where to watch birds in November & December
by Bob Yutzy

Where do we usually find our best winter birds? Fall River and McArthur, Millville Plains, Whiskeytown Lake, Kutras Lake, Lema Ranch, McCumber Lake, and East Turtle Bay are often productive. We should continue to watch the two new rice ponds along Rat Farm Road in McArthur. They have already produced the first county record of Franklin's Gull and one of the few county records of Black-bellied Plover.

Speaking of new areas, last year's longspur hangout on Leopard Lane, off Dersch Road, just past the county Burrowing Owl spot, should be searched and searched for a few Lapland Longspurs in with the Horned Lark flocks. This area is also our best habitat for Chestnut-collared Longspurs and that first county record of Snow Bunting that is just waiting to be discovered! Listen for Screech, Pygmy, Saw-whet, Barn, Great Horned and maybe even a Spotted or perhaps a Barred Owl.

Most feeders already have Juncos, Siskins, White-crowned, Golden-crowned, Fox, and Song Sparrows, Red-breasted Nuthatch, Hairy Woodpecker, Hermit Thrush and maybe even Waxwings. Of course, those consummate bird hawks, Cooper's and Sharp-shinned make their inevitable appearances too. Possible rarities include Pygmy Nuthatch, Purple Finch, or even White-throated Sparrow, Cassin's Finch or Evening Grosbeak; even more rarely, Harris's Sparrow or Rose-breasted Grosbeak.

The best birds to look for away from your feeders are Red-breasted Merganser, Red-necked Grebe, Surf Scoter, Long Tailed Duck, Tree and Harris's Sparrow, Northern Shrike, Pacific Loon, Greater Scaup and Thayer's, Mew and Glaucous-winged Gulls. Thorough gull watching may get you a Western Gull or possibly even that second county record of a Glaucous Gull, but be aware that gull watching is not for the impatient!

In the Fall River Valley White-fronted Geese are already in, as well as some Snow Geese. Tundra Swans should be in soon, perhaps with the larger Trumpeter Swan. Fall River Valley has Ferruginous and Rough-legged Hawks as does Millville Plains, along with Prairie Falcon and Golden Eagle. Search for the darkest looking birds to find the rare dark phase Ferruginous and Rough-legged Hawks. Kutras Lake and the arboretum area will hopefully have Peregrine Falcon. A Merlin may be in the Sacramento River area.

It's time for my annual reminder to visit one of our incredible refuges, Sacramento National Wildlife Refuge, Tule Lake and Klamath National Wildlife Refuges or Gray Lodge Wildlife Refuge between November and February. The thousands and sometimes millions of Snow, Ross, Canada, White-fronted Geese and Tundra Swans are truly breathtaking, especially if you can visit near dusk or dawn.
